Lorie Line: Concert to feature 'Fab Five'

The concert will coincide with the release of her latest 130-page music book, "The Early Years," featuring her own arrangements that she's recorded but hasn't published before, since she just recently received the licensing rights.

"It's all the older stuff that I recorded years ago," Line said.

On the Intimate Evening Series tour, Line will also have along other musicians known as her Fab Five: Derek Bromme (trombone, euphonium), Marcus Farros (drums), Mike Linden (guitar), Drew Moore (bass) and Robbie Nordstrom (violin).

They range in age from 22 to 26 and all of them, except one who is self-taught, have music degrees.

Line calls them "young and groovy kids" who are "pretty hip and cool."

"The women and girls love them," Line said, of her significant female fan base.

Line has performed with a few of the Fab Five in the past, but she's especially excited for the upcoming tour where all five of them will be part of her show. They give her a chance to work more variety into her shows than in the past, she said.

The show will bring "over-the-top glamour" from the floor to the chandelier, Line said, four costume changes and choreography. She also brings her own concert grand piano.

"I think people probably have a preconceived notion of what a concert would be like for a pianist," Line said. "And when people come to my show, they can't believe it."

Fans of Line and her music will also get the chance to greet her after the show, something she enjoys doing on the smaller tours. You can even bring your music or CDs for autographs.

"I can pretty much say hi to everybody," Line said. "It kind of makes it special." Line is also doing something for the first time during her 25-year run.

She will perform her music first during the spring tour, and then go back and record the music in her studio.

"I haven't had time to do them yet," she said. "When I get home at the end of May, I'll go right into the studio and I'll start making an album."

Since she'll have a chance to play all of the music at the concerts first, she said, she suspects the recordings will be wonderful as far as the quality is concerned.

Though she's an introvert, she loves being on stage, she said, adding that she'd rather give a concert than attend a party.

"Playing an instrument could be a really lonely job because there's so much practice time involved," Line said. "I get to take it and actually share it with people. It's just my calling in life."

"I never ever dreamed that I would have this fabulous of a career. I wake up every single day and pinch myself."

She also shows no signs of stopping. People will sometimes ask her when she might retire.

"Are you kidding? I'm just getting good at it," Line said. "It's a lifestyle for me. I think it keeps me thinking. It keeps me young spirited. I appreciate every day."

MNsure: Wait time could be longer

"We are adding additional capacity to the system right now," Leitz said after the board meeting in St. Paul. "This was expected and planned for — that as we moved into March, particularly as we moved into the last few days ..., that we would have additional load on the site."

The average wait time at the MNsure call center this week has been about eight minutes, Leitz told board members. That's longer than at some points earlier this month, but a far cry from average waits during December that routinely exceeded 60 minutes.

MNsure has more than doubled the number of call center workers answering phones.

"We expect the call volume to continue to rise until March 31, so we want people to be aware that one-minute wait times may not be the experience when they call," said MNsure spokesman Joe Campbell. "But it will be significantly better than it was last year."

Minnesota launched the MNsure health exchange last year to implement the federal Affordable Care Act, which requires almost all Americans to have health insurance or pay a tax penalty. People must sign up for coverage by March 31, or they could be subject to a tax of $95 or 1 percent of their annual income.

After this month, individuals seeking commercial health insurance won't have another chance to obtain coverage until Nov. 15, at which point policies for 2015 will be available. People who qualify for Medicaid and MinnesotaCare can still enroll in the public health insurance programs after March 31.

MNsure hasn't released numbers to indicate whether the exchange is helping make a dent in the estimated 445,000 Minnesotans who lacked health insurance last year. But anecdotal evidence was on display Wednesday in Minneapolis, where state Human Services Commissioner Lucinda Jesson met with people who've enrolled with help from Somali Health Solutions, a community group that employs health insurance counselors called "navigators."

Faisal Mire, 26, of Minneapolis said he's gone without health insurance for more than a decade, and has racked up some big medical bills.

But after going through the MNsure website with help from a navigator, Mire qualified for coverage with no premium from the state's Medical Assistance program.

"Finally, I feel safe," Mire said.

Somali Health Solutions has helped more than 1,000 people enroll, including nearly 600 people in Medical Assistance. Medical Assistance is Minnesota's version of the state-federal Medicaid health insurance program, and program enrollees account for about 52 percent of all MNsure enrollments thus far.

"We feel like the website is now crowded — sometimes it says: 'We can't process now, please do it again later,'" said Asli Ashkir, executive director of Somali Health Solutions, when Jesson asked about the MNsure website. "But we understand — because many people are rushing."

Jesson said the potential for last-minute snags explains why MNsure announced Monday a process for shielding people from penalties if technical problems prevent them from finalizing all steps of enrollment by March 31.
